Heritage as a field of research and collective action has emerged only in the last 40 years spurred by the 1972 Unesco World Heritage Convention. Conservation was the touchstone discipline of the field but the highly interdisciplinary nature of heritage has brought in a wide diversity of perspectives that has sometimes posed challenges to mutual understanding. Since the 1990s heritage studies has emerged as a distinct academic field and practices and rhetoric drawn from Professor Zan and his team of researchers have produced an instructive and discerning volume of international case studies on the management of heritage sites and institutions including some high profile cases like Machu Picchu and Pompeii. The authors then
