This book examines contemporary approaches to restitution from the perspective of museums. It focuses on the ways in which these institutions have been addressing the subject at a regional, national and international level. In particular, it explores contemporary practices and recent claims and investigates to what extent the question of restitution as an issue of ownership is still at large or whether museums have found additional ways to conceptualise and practice. This book is essential reading for anyone interested in restitution. Its essays bring together global case studies and thematic overviews exploring the wide range of activities, outcomes, thought and policy involved in restitution, including disputed cases.
